FOREWORD

THIS winter, perhaps more than ever before, our attention has been directed to the modern movement in art. It would therefore seem peculiarly fitting that, in the midst of that movement, we should pause for a moment and, in a measure, take stock of what American Art has meant in the past.

The collection of paintings by deceased artists here presented, cannot claim to constitute a pictorial history of American Art. It will be found, however, to include the best tendencies disclosed in the latter half of the last century by artists who have been recognized as leaders. Rash innovators some of them were considered in their day, though all have now been relegated to the ranks of the conservatives.

It has been thought best to select for this occasion pictures that have not been frequently shown; several have never been included in any public exhibition. They merely suggest the great wealth of choice pictures that are being enjoyed in private homes which are, for the most part, unknown to the general public.

To Miss L. P. Bliss, Mrs. C. O. Gates, Mrs. F. S. Smithers, Mr. H. H. Benedict, Mr. Louis Marshall, Mr. Harold I. Pratt, Mr. John T. Pratt, and Mr. James G. Shepherd, whose generosity in lending their pictures has made this exhibition possible, we extend our hearty thanks.

WILLIAM MACBETH.
