FOREWORD

"Variety is charming", repetition is dull.

It is because of this fact that the artist with an active analytical and exploring mind will paint still life, landscape, genre, in fact every thing rather than be pigeonholed and placed in a category.

Such masters as Winslow Homer, Degas, Renoir, Cezanne and others, because of their constant research attained the fullness of expression that is linked with their names. A survey of their work will show a variety of technique and method, and the use of various media and constant effort and change.

Barnard Lintott has, therefore, the best of authority for his belief that each of the subjects that interests him, - landscapes, portraits, flowers, genre, - demands its own technical expression. The variety of his methods adds to the enjoyment of his pictures.
