FOREWORD

FEW of our landscape painters bring to completion each year so few pictures as does Mr. Davis. It has not been our privilege for a long time to show a whole room of them together, and we welcome the opportunity which has now come to us.

Each season we find more and more people awaiting word that his new canvases are on the way, and often these never reach the exhibition walls. By holding these pictures this year until all were ready, Mr. Davis is now able to make a showing which will provide a splendid chance for those who hitherto have not found a good number to select from. It is a safe prediction that this opportunity will be eagerly grasped.

The award to him of the Saltus Medal in the present exhibition of the National Academy of Design, is just one more of the many official recognitions of the importance of Mr. Davis and his work.
